Abstract

This research aims at describing the discourse structure and linguistic features of English journal article introductions written by non-native speaker lecturers. The data were collected from the journals written by lecturers of UGM, UNS, and Undip totaling 11 articles consisting of engineering, marine sciences and fisheries, medical sciences, animal husbandary, agriculture, economics, humanities. The samples were analyzed based on 'move' analysis proposed by Swales (1991) and the linguistic features, i.e. diction, phrases, sentence pattern and tense. The results show that in terms of their structure, the introductions written by Indonesian lecturers tend to have four 'moves' proposed by Swales. However, the writer could not find any single sample having complete structures as proposed by Swales.
