IDENTIFICATION OF FAMILY SUPPORT AND PSYCHOLOGICAL CAPITAL ON INDONESIAN WOMEN WORKERS: THE PRELIMINARY RESEARCH

INTRODUCTION
- The number of women workers in formal sector had been increased. The issue of women workers in Indonesia is much higher than the men’s (Data BPS, 2008).
- The condition above seems to working women today need a positive psychological condition that not only concerning intellectual and competitive ability to be able to survive at work and social demand. Those characteristics named as psychological capital. Psychological capital can be trained and grows in a person whenever the environment supports its development (Luthan in Gelin, 2011).
- One of the closest and the deepest social network for a woman is family. Dolan and Canavan (2008) said that informal family support among family members is one of the forms of capital helping system, that can be the source of help for each member of the family.

METHODS
- Participants were 62 Indonesian women workers who completed the open-ended questionnaire of identification of women worker need: family support & character (multiple responses).
- Demographic status: 7 students, 10 citizen, from high school until postgraduate academic background, 21-52 years old; married: 1-8 years.
- Data analyses: quantitative content analysis with thematic & referential unit analysis.

RESULTS
- Most of the respondents explained the meaning of family support is very important to them. Family support means as motivation, spirit, & very helpful for their jobs.
- There was identified 8 types of family support that needed by Indonesian women worker (concrete support, emotional support, understanding support, esteem support, moral & informational support).
- The most family support that needed is concrete support (45.3%)
- Indonesian women workers’ positive characters consist of 4 dimension of psychological capital (resilience, optimism, self-efficacy, & hope) and character as honesty, loyalty, discipline, leadership, creativity, & consistency.
- Several respondents (13.5%) explained that family support is important aspect to develop positive character on their works.

DISCUSSION
- Supported by the research result. Current (in Delan & Canavan, 2008) explained that family support consist of concrete support, support that directly related to the daily activities, such as: helping to take care of children while the mother is away at work; emotional support, empathy, listening, and presence when someone through a hard time; advice/informational support, person feels comfort sharing, and receiving input that comes from the advice than the context of the advice itself; & esteem support that focus on how someone’s presence is valued.
- In Indonesian women workers, concrete support from their family is the most valued for them, because helpful partner or other families member related to daily activities can help them to organise their work without guilty feeling. This result is different from Stein & Chen (2010), that workers feel a bigger value in their job performance when they receive emotional support from their spouses.
- 13.5% respondents told that family support is important aspect to improve their positive character. This result can be support by Delan & Canavan (2008), that explain pay gap would grow in positive environments, one of them is family that would give social support among members and as a form of capital helping system.
- The unique result from this preliminary study, that not only 4 types of family support needed by women worker in Indonesia, but moral support (such stay from family members) and understanding support from spouse and children is identified.

Presented on 4th Asia Psychological Association Conference: Mindfulness, Well being & Positive Psychology, held in Tanumanegra University, Indonesia, 1-7 July 2012.