Editors' Note

This international seminar on Language Maintenance and Shift II is a continuation of the previous international seminar with the same theme conducted by the Master Program in Linguistics, Diponegoro University in July 2011. We do hope that the seminar with this theme can become a yearly program of the Master Program in Linguistics, Diponegoro University, as we see that this topic still needs our serious attention due to the inevitable impact of globalization on the life of indigenous languages.

We would like to thank the seminar committee for putting together the seminar that gave rise to this collection of papers. Thanks also go to the head and secretary of the Master Program in Linguistics Diponegoro University, without whom the seminar would not have been possible.

The table of contents lists all the papers presented at the seminar. The first five papers are those presented by invited keynote speakers. They are Prof. Dr. Hanna (Balai Bahasa Provinsi Sulawesi Tenggara, Indonesia), Prof. Dr. Bambang Kaswanti Purwo (Atma Jaya Catholic University, Indonesia), Dr. Sugiyono (Language Center, Indonesia), Peter Suwarno, Ph.D (Arizona State University), and Herudjati Purwoko, Ph.D (Diponegoro University).

In terms of the topic areas, there are 33 papers on language maintenance, 24 papers on language learning, 19 paper on sociolinguistics, 15 paper on pragmatics, 8 papers on discourse analysis, 8 paper on morphology, 2 papers on syntax, 2 papers on translation, 1 papers on psycholinguistics, 1 papers on phonology, and 1 papers on semantics.

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF BANYUMASAN CONVERSATIONAL IMPLICATURES

Abstract

To mean what you say is sometimes problematic in daily conversation, moreover in some indigenous dialects. It requires comprehensive context to achieve the core of communication. So does in Banyumasan. Banyumasan or Banyumas dialect is a variant which is found along the flow of Serayu river. The river flows from Sindoro-Sumbing Mountains (Koentjaraningrat, 1984:23). Banyumas dialect is one of some variants of Javanese language. Banyumasan has some differences compared to standard Javanese spoken in Jogjakarta, Surakarta and Semarang. Those differences are also reflected in the characteristics of conversational implicatures found in this dialect. Conversational implicature is a proposition that is implied by the utterance of sentence in a context even though that proposition is not a part of nor an entailment of what was actually said (Grice, 1975; Gazdar, 1979). The characteristics of conversational implicatures are calculability, cancellability, non-detachability, non-conventionality, and indeterminacy. (Grice, 1975; Levinson, 1983; Thomas, 1996; dan Cruse, 2004). A dialect has different characteristics compared to other dialects of the same language and so does the characteristic of conversational implicature.

Introduction

Having involved in a daily conversation of a certain dialect requires mutual interchangeability from all participants to avoid misleading communication. Dialect, in this sense, may vary from one place to another. The variations may be caused by several factors. Trudgill and Chambers briefly define what a dialect is (1994:3). They mention that :

..... dialect is a substandard, low status, often rustic form of language, generally associated with the peasantry, the working class, or other group of lacking in prestige. Dialect is also a term which is often applied to form of language, particularly those spoken in more isolated parts of the world, which have no written form. And dialects are also often regarded as some kind of (often erroneous) deviation from a norm-as aberrations of a correct or standard form of language.

From the definition above, it can be concluded that dialect is caused by geographical barrier and it is a form of substandard language which is commonly used in low prestige situation. This paper is aimed to investigate the characteristic of conversational implicatures in Banyumasan, a dialect of Javanese language. This dialect is somehow 'breathtaking' since it has some specific features that differentiate it from the standard Javanese. Those features include phonological dan lexical features.

Theoretical Framework

The theoretical framework of this research includes selling and buying as a text, context, speech act, cooperative principles, relevance theory, implicature and characteristics of conversational implicature.

Selling and Buying as a Text

Basically language used as a means of communication is divided into two forms; spoken and written. Each of them has some characteristics which differentiate one from another. Spontaneous speech is unlike written text. It contains many mistakes, sentences are usually brief and indeed the whole fabric of verbal expression is riddled with hesitation and silences (Halliday, 1994:76). Halliday also mentions that provided whatever criteria are adopted are applied consistently, the lexical density of written language is likely to be of the order of twice as high as that for speech; and the discrepancy will be greater if other factors such as the relative probability of lexical items are taken into account (p. 80)

However, in delivering message, spoken language is also as informative as written language. Spoken language also has both surface and deep structure. Halliday quotes that speech is, by its nature, 'low in content'-in the special sense of lexical density...; but it is not 'low in content' in the general sense of lacking information; and it is certainly not unstructured and superficial (p. 77). The statement that spoken language is not unstructured and superficial implies that spoken language also has surface and deep structure.

Selling and buying things is very close to human social life. In doing so, language plays an important role. The conversation happened in selling and buying things is an interesting language phenomenon in our society. This type of conversation can not be classified as casual conversation since casual conversation does not have any clear pragmatic purposes (Eggins and Slade, 1997). The conversation in selling and buying things has a clear pragmatic purposes, that is one participant gets things or services the other participant provides things or services.

No matter how simple a text is, it always has a structure. It is in line with Ventola who states that 'even in the use of language that appears most effortless and least specialized, namely casual conversation, possesses structure in this sense (1979). Structure is made up of separate events or elements. Hasan (1989) mentions the obligatory elements of selling and buying text as follows: sale request, sale compliance, sale, purchase, purchase closure. The generic structure of selling and buying text consists of sale initiation, sale request, sale compliance, sale inquiry, sale, purchase, purchase closure, finis. From her definition, it can be summed up that sale initiation, sale inquiry, finis are the optional elements.

Context

Context, in a simple way, is a media to make the speaker and hearer's intension clearer. Halliday defines context as stated below (1989:5).

There is text and there is other text that accompanies it: text that is 'with', namely the con-text. This notion of what is 'with the text', however, goes beyond what is said and written it includes other non-verbal goings on- the total environment in which a text unfolds. So, it serves to make a bridge between the text and the situation in which text actually occurs.

He explains further that context is divided into three concepts. These concepts serve to interpret the social context of a text, the environment in which meanings are being exchanged (1989:12). The first is field of discourse. Field of discourse refers to what is happening, to the nature of the social action that is taking place: what is it that the participant are engaged in, in which the language figures as some essential components. The second is tenor of discourse. Tenor of discourse refers to who is taking part, to the nature of the participants, their statuses and roles: what kind of role-relationship obtain among the participants, including permanent and temporary relationship of one kind or another, both the type of speech role that they are taking on in the dialogue and the whole cluster of socially significant relationships in which they are involved. The third is mode of discourse. Mode of discourse refers to what part of language is playing, what it is that the participants are expecting the language to do for them in that situation: the symbolic organization of the text, the status that it has, and its function in the context, including the channel (is it spoken or written or some combination of the two) and also the rhetorical mode, what is being achieved by the text in terms of such categories as persuasive, expository, didactic, and the like.

Speech Acts

Speech acts are words that do things (Mey, 1994:110). When an utterance is produced it is not merely a combination of words. It has deeper intention. When one says 'I'll come tomorrow' he does not solely say it, however; at the same time when he produces this utterance he also makes a promise. Words that 'promise' means that they do 'something'. There are numerous speech acts in people's utterances and Searle classifies them into five groups (Mey, 1994:165-167) as follows. 1) Representatives: These speech acts carry the values of true and false. In this point, the utterance must match the world in order to be true; 2) Directives: These speech acts embody an effort on the part of the speaker to get the hearer to do something, to 'direct' him or her towards some goal. 3) Commissives : Like directives, commissives operate a change in the world by means of creating an obligation, however, this obligation is created in the speaker, not in the hearer, as in the case of directives. 4) Expressives: These speech acts, as the word say, express an inner state of the speaker which, insofar as it is essentially subjective, says nothing about the world. 5) Declaration: These speech acts are the declaration which change the state of affairs in the world.

Cooperative Principles.

In order to be an effective communicator, a speaker and a hearer have to obey the cooperative principle proposed by Grice. He mentions that each speaker should give 'enough' contribution in conversation. He divides the cooperative principles into four maxims (Levinson, 1995 :101-102). The first is maxim of quality. This maxim contains an advice for the speakers to make their contribution one that is true, specifically; do not say what you believe to be false and do not say that for which you lack adequate evidence. The second is maxim of quantity. It includes the suggestion for the speakers to make their contribution as informative as is required for the current purposes of the exchange and do not make contribution more informative than is required. The third is maxim of relevance. It involves the recommendation for the speakers to make their contribution relevant. Last but not least is maxim of manner. It consists of advice for the speakers to be perspicuous and specifically avoid obscurity, avoid ambiguity, be brief, and be orderly.

Relevance Theory

The four maxims of Grice's cooperative principles are then simplified by Sperber and (1986) into one principle that is relevance principle. It then triggered the emergence of relevance theory. Communication is a process involving two information-processing devices. One device modifies the physical environment of the other. As a result, the second device constructs representations similar to representations already stored in the first devices. Oral communication, for instance, is a modification by the speaker of the hearer's acoustic environment, as a result of which the hearer entertains thoughts similar to the speaker's own. Whether an utterance is relevant or not can be explained by using the contextual assumptions. Those assumptions will inevitably lead the participants to make contextual implications. Sperber and Wilson specifically highlighted that communication is a matter of enlarging mutual cognitive environment, not to duplicating thoughts. The most important differences between Grice's approach and relevance theory has to do with the explanation of communication. Grice's account of conversations starts from a distinction between what is explicitly said and what is implicated. No explanation of explicit communication is given; essentially, the code model, with a code understood as a set of conventions, is assumed to apply. Implicatures are explained as assumptions that the audience must make to preserve the idea that the speaker has obeyed the maxims, or at least the cooperative principle. The principle of relevance is intended to explain ostensive communication as whole, both explicit and implicit.

Implicature

As mentioned before, implicature is a proposition that is implied by the utterance of a sentence in a context even though that proposition is not a part of nor an entailment of what was actually said (Gazdar, 1979: 38). It has two classes, conventional implicature and conversational implicature. The former refers to implicature that derives from the conventional feature of the word used in utterance. The latter arises from the flouting of the general conversational principles. Lyons (1995:272) states that:

'the differences between them is that the former depends on something other than what is truth-conditional in the conversational use, or meaning of particular form of expression, whereas the latter derives from a set of mere general principle which regulate the proper conduct of conversation'

Based on Lyons' opinion, it can be assumed that conventional implicature is more general than conversational implicature since everyone knows that the meaning of word that constitutes an utterance is based on the convention of the community which uses the language itself.

Implicature can be resulted from the flouting of maxim of the cooperative principles. When a speaker exploits those maxims, he or she tries to hide something. The 'hidden' thing is the implied meaning of the conversation, Therefore this implied meaning is the conversational implicature.

Conversational implicature is a proposition which is probably implied or meant by the speaker which may be different from what he or she actually said in a conversation. (Grice 1975:43, Gazdar 1979:38). Mey (1997:99) adds that A conversational implicature is, therefore, something which is implied in conversation, that is, something which is left implicit in actual language use. In brief, it can be said that conversational implicature is something left unsaid by the participants of the conversation.

The Characteristics of Conversational Implicatures

Grice postulated five characteristic of conversational implicatures as follows. 1) Cancellability : Conversational implicatures are cancelable or defeasible if some other premises are added to the original ones. 2) Non-detachability: The conversational implicature is attached to the semantic content of what is said, not to the linguistic form used. Therefore, it is possible to use a synonym and keep the implicature intact. In other words, the implicature will not be detached, separated from the utterance as a whole, even though the specific word may be changed. 3) Calculability: The conversational implicature of an utterance is different from its literal meaning. There is no direct link between the two. So if it is to succeed as the speaker intends to, there must be ways for the hearer to work it out. 4) Non-conventionality : Conversational Implicature is an extra meaning, not inherent in the words used. One cannot find conversational implicature listed in the dictionary. To work out the conversational implicature of an utterance, one needs to know its conversational meaning and the context in which it is used. In other words, a conversational implicature is the adding up of the conventional meaning and the context. The context changes, the implicature will also change. 5) Indeterminacy : An expression with a single meaning can give rise to a different implicature on different occasions, and indeed on any one occasion the set of associated implicature may not be exactly determinable.

Grice classification is then criticized by Levinson (1983), Thomas (1996), Cruse (2004). From their explanation, it is then summed up that the characteristic of conversational implicature are: cancellability, calculability, non-detachability, and context-dependent.

Methodology

This research is a descriptive qualitative research since, the researcher describes the data qualitatively. Creswell (1994) mentions that a qualitative research is an exploratory research where the researcher explores a single entity or phenomenon (the case) bounded by time and activity and collects detailed information by using a variety of data collection procedures during a sustained period of time. Data are derived from natural conversation happened in buying and selling in Banyumas dialect. Hammersley (1992) highlighted that natural occurring data is preferable in qualitative research. Data is then analyzed by using the relevance theory and context to find the conversational implicatures. Those implicatures are then classified into Searle's speech acts. After being classified into Searle's speech acts, conversational implicatures are also analyzed into their characteristics.

Discussion

The explanation of the characteristics of conversational implicature is the main topic of this part. The characteristics are cancellability, calculability, non-detachability, and context-dependent.

Summary

From the discussion of the conversational implicature of Banyumasan dialect, it reveals a conclusion that the characteristics of conversational implicature happened in this dialect are calculability, cancellability, non-detachability, and context-dependent. However, from the data that has been analyzed so far, calculability becomes the most frequently found characteristic. It is somehow troublesome to deduce whether it is explicature or implicature. This finding then lead to a bigger question to the culture of Banyumas. This may be caused by the culture that Banyumas people are known as Cablaka-speak frankly. To answer this question, deeper analysis is highly recommended.
